

About the Editors and Contributors

Fabiola Córdova

Fabiola Córdova worked for more than three years designing and implementing democracy-strengthening programs across Latin America. Ms. Córdova worked at the Washington, DC-based National Democratic Institute, where she managed programs to empower emerging Latin American political party leaders; strengthen political parties' accountability and outreach efforts; monitor the fairness of electoral processes; empower women; and conduct political assessments. Ms. Córdova also lived and worked in Port-au-Prince, Haiti where she helped design a new party development program. Before NDI, Ms. Córdova worked at the American Red Cross in Central Massachusetts, where she managed its international activities. She recently completed a Master's degree in Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, and was a Graduate Assistant at the Moynihan Institute of Global Affairs at Syracuse University. Fabiola Córdova was born in Bolivia, she received a Bachelors' degree in International Relations and Foreign Languages from Clark University, and is fluent in Spanish, English, French and German.

Janouska Grandoit

Janouska Grandoit is currently a second year Masters student in International Relations and Economics at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. Her studies while at Maxwell have focused on Global Development and the Caribbean, particularly Haiti, her family's country of origin. She is particularly interested in the contribution of the Caribbean diaspora to development in the region. In 1999, she received her BA in International Relations and Africana Studies from Wellesley College. After graduation she went on to intern at the Women Foreign Policy Group, the Phelps Stokes Fund's International Visitor Program in Washington, DC, and Worldco Financial Services, a trading firm, in New York City. Janouska has lived in Dakar, Senegal where she studied international development and worked for a women's credit mutual. After completion of her studies at the Maxwell School, Janouska would like to apply her skills to work contributing to Caribbean regional development.

sourav guha

sourav guha has worked in the education sector, running a service-learning program for middle school students for the AmeriCorps affiliate City Year, in Columbus, Ohio, and serving as an Assistant Dean of Admission at Wesleyan University, his undergraduate alma mater. He holds a BA in cultural anthropology from Wesleyan, an MA from the University of Michigan in South Asian Studies, and an MPA from the Maxwell School.

Casey Hanewall

Casey Hanewall holds eight years of experience in the field of international development. He has designed and managed several U.S. Agency for International Development programs focused on economic development in Latin America and the Caribbean, and has lived and worked throughout the region. He has also served as Senior Advisor for Program Development for the National Democratic Institute, a nongovernmental organization dedicated to strengthening democracy worldwide. Casey received his bachelor's degree in Foreign Service from Georgetown University, with an emphasis on international relations, law, and organization. He recently earned his Master's degree in Public Administration from the Maxwell School of Syracuse University, and currently works as an analyst for the Government Accountability Office.

Allen Hollenbach

Allen Hollenbach holds a Bachelor's Degree in Political Science from Houghton College and an MPA from the Maxwell School of Syracuse University. Mr. Hollenbach's technical interests -- which center around environmental management and local governance -- include decentralized natural resources management, water supply and sanitation service provision, and environmental finance. Presently, Mr. Hollenbach is working in Indonesia on a USAID-funded initiative to improve access to adequate water supply and sanitation services.

Wossenyesh Mazengia

Wossenyesh Mazengia has worked as a journalist at the Voice of America covering African issues. In 2001, she was a Fulbright scholar at Addis Ababa University, researching the impact of sexual violence on girls' education in Ethiopia. Her interests include foreign policy and gender and development. She has a bachelor's degree in International Relations from Juniata College and is currently completing master's degrees in Public Administration and International Relations at the Maxwell School.

Laura McKechnie

Laura McKechnie is a Presidential Management Fellow working for the United States Department of State. Her interests include economic development in Latin America and national security issues. She holds Master's degrees in Public Administration and International Relations from the Maxwell School of Syracuse University, and a bachelor's degree in Journalism from the University of Maryland. Her experiences range from volunteering in Peru to nonprofit fundraising in Washington, DC.

Quy Kim Nguyen

Quy Kim Nguyen was a Program Officer for Development at the Danish Embassy in Hanoi, Vietnam where she worked in the area of poverty reduction. She earned a BA in Sociology from the National University of Social Sciences in Hanoi. She is the recipient of a Fulbright scholarship to study for the MA in Public Administration degree at the Maxwell School of Syracuse University and has focused on the social, economic and cultural aspects of how gender issues relate to poverty reduction in developing countries.

Sharon Pailler

Sharon Pailler is currently pursuing her MS in Forest Resource Policy at SUNY-ESF and her MPA at Syracuse University's Maxwell School. Prior to graduate work, Sharon was an enthusiastic waitress and avid climber in New Hampshire. She received her undergraduate degree in biology from the University of Kansas and subsequently served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Guinea, West Africa. Sharon's professional interests include sustainable resource use, international development, and wildlife-human conflict.

Sapan Parekh

Sapan Parekh's interests range from multicultural education to conflict management, from fiction-writing to teaching. He attended Washington University in St. Louis, where he earned a bachelor's degree in Anthropology and Environmental Studies, with specialized classwork in Business and Religious Studies. He spent one year teaching English and citizenship preparation courses to refugees. Sapan recently left Syracuse University with a Master of Arts in International Relations from the Maxwell School. He focused on Asia, on intercultural communication and negotiation, and on international conflict management.

Venkata Rama Sastry Pidaparathi

Venkata Rama Sastry Pidaparathi is an Indian Police Service officer. Presently he is working as Deputy Inspector General, Economic Offenses Wing in the Central Bureau of Investigation, India. His interests include anti-corruption and conflict resolution. Venkata holds a master's degree in Industrial Management from the Indian Institute of Technology and has recently completed a masters' program in Public Administration from the Maxwell School of Syracuse University.

Meghan Rasmussen

Meghan Rasmussen has worked in humanitarian relief and public health in the U.S. non-profit sector. Her interests also include economic development, minority rights, and intercultural communication, with a particular focus on Turkey and the Middle East. She has a bachelor's degree in Economics from Bowdoin College and is completing master's degrees in Public Administration and International Relations at the Maxwell School of Syracuse University.

Benjamin Rempell

Benjamin Rempell has worked with U.S. and international non-profit organizations on conflict resolution in Serbia, Bosnia, and Israel/Palestine. He has also lived and studied in India, Tibet, and Latin America. Benjamin has received a master's degree in Public Administration from the Maxwell School of Syracuse University and is currently completing a master's degree in International Affairs from Johns Hopkins SAIS with foci in International Economics and Conflict Management.

Bandita Sijapati

Bandita Sijapati is a doctoral student in Social Science at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University. Her research involves student activism, transnationalism, social movements, and class conflicts. She has a Masters degree from Columbia University, New York, and a Bachelors degree from Macalester College, Minnesota. She is the co-author of A Kingdom Under Siege: Nepal's Maoist Insurgency, 1996-2003 (Printhouse, 2003 and Zed Books, 2005) and co-editor of Women Making Peace: Strengthening Women's Role in Peace Process (SAFHR, Kathmandu, 2002) and has contributed a section to Social and Economic Conditions of East Timor (International Conflict Resolution Program, New York, 1999). Prior to joining Syracuse University, she worked as a Research Officer for UNDP's South Asia Poverty Alleviation Programme in Nepal.

Stephanie Smith

Stephanie Smith is a doctoral student in Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University. Her research interests include development policy and administration, comparative administration, and nongovernmental and nonprofit organizations. She obtained her MPA from San Francisco State University in 2004 after working in the U.S. nonprofit sector and serving as a Peace Corps volunteer in Russia.