
About the Editors and Contributors

Hannah Allerdice

Hannah Allerdice is a graduate student in the Department of Political Science. She currently studies matters relating to poverty, conflict and public policy both in the American context and across countries. During the 2006-2007 academic year she will serve as the Coordinator for the Conflict Management Center.

Žaklina Marta Bogdanić

Žaklina Marta Bogdanić worked for more than twelve years in the field of humanitarian assistance and economic development. As a senior program manager with Catholic Relief Services in Croatia she has been designing and operating microfinance programs in Croatia and helped establish the local microfinance organization MikroPlus. She also initiated an informal working group to develop microfinance legislation in Croatia and has cooperated with USAID, the World Bank, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and a variety of transnational NGOs and local organizations and legislators in these efforts. She holds bachelor's and master's degrees in Economics from the University of Zagreb in Croatia. In 2005/2006 as a Fulbright Fellow at Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs she studied the role of transnational organizations in shaping domestic development policies. Her research interests include non-profit management, development policy and administration, and transnational governance.

Anuradha Sharma Chagti

Anuradha Sharma Chagti is an officer of the Central Secretariat Service of Government of India and has worked both at the Federal and Union Territory level. She has worked in the fields of Urban Development, Administrative Reforms and Education. Her interests include urban area reforms and Intellectual Property Rights issues and their implications for developing countries. She holds a master's degree in Geography and Urban Planning and has recently completed a master's degree in Public Administration from the Maxwell School of Syracuse University.

Angela Fitzpatrick

Angela Fitzpatrick is a Ph.D. student in Political Science and is originally from the Washington, DC, area. In 2002, she completed her BA in Political Science at Babes-Bolyai University in Cluj-Napoca, Romania and went on to Budapest, Hungary to obtain an MA in the same field from Central European University the next year. At Syracuse, she is doing coursework in Public Administration and American Politics, with a particular focus on institutions and political development. Angela's research interests include the rule of law, judicial reform and democratic transition, and the politics of high courts.

Rachel Fleishman

Rachel Fleishman is a doctoral student in Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. She has a master's degree in Natural Resources from Ohio State University and spent two years working for an environmental NGO in Costa Rica. Her research and academic interests center around environmental partnerships, community based conservation, and the role of non-profits in environmental and development policy.

Tamara Hafner

Tamara Hafner is a Ph.D. student in Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University. She has general interests in technology change and economic development, and is particularly interested in the adaptation and production of technologies in developing countries to address local and regional problems. Her current research focuses on pharmaceutical innovations in developing countries and the incentives needed to stimulate R&D on neglected diseases.

Fethi Keles

Fethi Keles is a Ph.D. student in cultural anthropology. He received his BA in 1999 from Bosphorus University in Istanbul and his MA in History at Fatih University in Istanbul. In his prospective dissertation, he plans to explore the context of Bosnian refugees in the United States, the question of how, when, and why people remember or forget their pasts. Identity formation in Diaspora, questions of cultural belonging and exclusion, involuntary migration and its consequences, and the anthropological study of nationalism are among his areas of substantive focus. Further, he has an interest in the study of language in society, semiotics, intertextuality, and linguistic relativism.

Malte Lierl

Malte Lierl has studied International Relations at the Dresden University of Technology in Germany and the Moscow State Institute of International Relations in Russia. Currently, he is pursuing a dual Masters degree in Economics and International Relations at the Maxwell School of Syracuse University. He is interested in the political economy of countries with weak institutions, including questions related to rent seeking, state building, fragile statehood, and clientelism. Eastern Europe and the post-Soviet countries are the focus of his regional experience.

Deepa Prakash

Deepa Prakash is a doctoral student in the Political Science department. She holds an M.A. in International Relations and an M. Phil in disarmament studies from Jawaharlal Nehru University, India. She is interested in security, political violence, identity and foreign policy, with a focus on S. Asia.

Stephanie Smith

Stephanie Smith is a Ph.D. Candidate in Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University. Her dissertation research concerns the political prioritization and institutionalization of health policy in India. Her research interests include nonprofit and NGO policy and management, collaborative governance and international development and are informed by nearly 10 years working in nonprofits and internationally.

Disha Tewari

Disha Tewari is a graduate student in the Department of Anthropology at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Syracuse University. Her research focuses on women's reproductive health care issues. She is currently working on a research proposal that addresses the issue of male involvement in women's access to health care facilities in North India. She has a Masters degree in Anthropology and Demography from Delhi University and Jawaharlal Nehru University, India. She did her Bachelors in Zoology at Miranda House, Delhi University.

Kenichi Yamada

Kenichi Yamada is currently pursuing his MA in International Relations at the Maxwell School of Syracuse University. His research interests include economic and social development policies with a focus on the effects of the extractive industries in developing countries and transition economies. His research interest also extends to the impact of science, information and communications technologies on development. He holds a BA in International Studies from Tokai University, Japan. As part of his Masters training, he has completed internships at the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in Geneva, Switzerland.