Students will develop a scroll that represents the past-present-future
Students will create a pat (story) that goes along with the imagery (about yourself in real life, a wish for yourself, family or the world)

Materials:
Bengali PowerPoint
Bengali YouTube video
6x11.8 white paper
9x12 scrap Manila paper
pencils/erasers rulers markers crayons
colored pencils
index cards
comic book

Introduction:
PowerPoint on Bengali Scrolls Art Class discussion: compare and contrast scrolls to comic book (show a story with no words and how the frames have to connect to tell that story), history of Bengali scrolls, brainstorm ideas that could be used (animals, plants, insects, people, planets, etc.)
Using Elmo: Teacher demonstration of scroll layout and ideas that could be used to show past-present-future. Also demonstrate ideas for coloring and details to link the 3 frames together.
Process:

Day 1:
Student decides on a sketch and develop ideas for their pat on the manila paper. Use imagery such as animals, plant, people, planets, insects etc.
On a long sheet of paper, either horizontal or vertical and draw 3 panels (frames) that tell a story of past-present-future in a similar style to that of a Bengali scroll. Each panel should be a simple but independent image that relates to the next image in sequence.
Students should design a border based on traditional Bengali scrolls using florals, lines and shapes.

Day 2:
Finish pencil drawing if not completed. Student will have a choice of what materials they would like to use for coloring. Remind students of what they feel they can work most successful in. (crayons, color pencil, marker or a combination)

Day 3:
Finish coloring. When finished write a pat (story) on an index card that explains your story in a simple way.

Criteria for Evaluation:

Does your scroll represent past-present-future?
Are all 3 frames connected and related?
Does your writing make sense with your visual images?
How is your craftsmanship?
Bengali Scrolls
Where is Bengal?

- Bengal is in India
- Community of artists called Patuas
- Paint colorful scrolls to accompany songs (pat) which they sing while displaying their scrolls
What do these scrolls show?

- Scrolls may relate to historic, current, religious, and cultural events to the audience

- These patuas have passed their tradition down for generations

- Travel long distances to perform in small villages.

- Often tell stories with morals, gods and goddesses, or symbolism.

- Still made today although only few still create them because of competition from radio, television, and movies.
To make the scroll the patua uses one piece of paper per “frame.” This is similar to a story board or comic book which are also broken up into “frames.” These frames together create a visual story.

“Global Warming” by Monu Chitrakar
The patuas sew or glue the frames together to create one long scroll which they often adhere to old saris. The individual frames have borders which disguise the seams between frames. In pencil, the patuas first draw the images and borders for their frames. Then they paint. Some paints are made of plants and minerals, some use commercial paints.

“Evolution up to Environmental Chaos” by Haseena Chitrakar
A Bengali scroll made by an 8 year old artist
One the painting is complete, the dark outlines are often added at the end of the painting process.
